The first Said She Would Kill Herself, and was Found Twenty Feet Briow the Edge of the Pallandes, but there was No At-tempt at Suicide-How Came She There! When the Ryans moved to Alpine, just back of the Palisades in New Jersey, two years ago. they brought with them a young Scotch girl amed Jennie Davidson. They had got her in Sections, where they had known her mother. and though she was their servant they treated her with much consideration. She was 19, nctive, pretty, and wayward, and became a great favorite among the young men emplayed at the country places of the rich city alks who summer in the neighborhood. The livans tried their best to keep her at home nights, but failed. She would go out, and her conduct made gossip. Of late she developed an intimacy with a gardener employed on the summer place of Frank Hopkins, the son-inlaw of Stephen V. White. As the gardener was middle aged and married, with a family esides, this made more talk, and gossip had it that the gardener's wife was much inconsed at Jennie's actions. There were words in the fivan household over this affair, and the girl grew dissatisfied and pettish, and declared she was going to commit suicide. She said this several times, and the neight ors thought that she was not altogether right in her mind. Mrs. Ryan had told people that the girl's mother had been confined in an insane asylum twice in Scotland. At 10 o'clock on Wednesday night, when the liven family retired. Jennie was at home. She had shown no inclination to go out that night. In the morning she was not seen about the Mrs. Bran did not give this much thought, supposing she was busy about the

The liyans live nearly a mile west of the Palisades. Where the road ends at the clift there is a rocky point reaching out over the river, which is a lockent point for the whole neighborhood, forthe varies often go there, and dennie Davidson land visited it only the Sunday before. On the meth side of this point there is a sharp display for a substantial visited it only the Sunday before. On the meth side of this point there is a sharp display for the control of the sunday before with heads to an abrupt precipies of 80 feet, at the feat of which there are masses of broken rick. All this property belongs to Fanning Alberts, who lives near by. At 1 o'clock that afternoon Miss Alberts went to this point for a walk. Locking over the north side, site saw a woman bring motionless went this sloping ledge of rock. Her face was extract with congulated blood. She seemed to he dead, but Miss Alberts did not dare call to be, for fear, if she yet lived, she might try to rise, and this roll over the precipies. So she am down the road and sent some men to the spot. The livans live nearly a mile west of on found a path which led in a round-ut course to the ledge where the woman and lifted her ur. She groaned. They her to a he use and washed the blood off face. The looked up at them, and soon them who she was. Then she became conscious. that then who she was. Then she became the conscious, they took her in a wegen to the Englewood Iberpitch, and notified Township Marshal incress t. Tewnsend, who went at once to Allice to investigate the case. He concluded that the girl has attempted suleide. There was trong evidence in favor of this conclusion. About the times the girl had been found on the rocky ledge Mrs. Byan had issued a note in the kitchen in her handwriths. It set fortistint she was tried of life, and had determined to die. It contained her aftens to many of her friends, mentioned them he hand, and to did where she wished to be bried, and who she wanted or her pail butters.

to the color of the color of the color of the color of the color and discovered that she had not slept there. This, added to her previous threats of suicide, seemed to settle the matter. The conclusion was that the girl had left the house after the family had gone to bed on Wednesday night, had gone in the load to the cliff, where she had been on the receivous sanday and doubtless taken note of the height, and had thrown herself off. In the darkness she had not jumped clear of the packy ledge. The many cuts and bruises on her free were doubtless due to the rocks on which she fell, or so at least the marshal concluded.

which she fell, or so at least the marshal concluded.

To be sure the girl's jacket had been found rolled up neatly and laid like a pillow under her head, but perions she had had strength enough to do this after she had jumped. The marshal could not explain how she could have inlien twenty feet and landed with her skirts stretched neatly to her feet, or why a shoe was missing from one foot and could not be found anywhere, or how it had happened that her hat was found in the bushes thirty feet away from her and near the roundabout path which ledd through the woods to tho ledge. These lands were inexplicable, but the marshal could had attempted suicible by leaping off. He cliff. Yesterday he did nothing in the case.

But yesterday there were developments which have led the people of Alpineto view the affair in a different light. In the first place, they argued, how was it possible, if the girl jumped off the cliff and was in) red by the fail of twenty feet, that she could have smoothed her dresses out and rolled up her jacket for a pillew? Second, she lay on her back on the edge of a sioping ledge and so close to I that it was hardly rossible for her to move without failing over the 80-foot precipice. Could she have arranged that rillow and laid herself out there? Third, why in the world should Jennie Davidson was from the liyan house to the cliff to commit salede with only one show on? It was three-guarters of a mile. Fourth, why should lard face, neck and the upper part of her body the face, neck and the upper part of her body and limbs? And why sendie upon her body and limbs in the limbs of the massed and blackaged. Suppose that Jennie Davidson had been assaulted somewhere else and beaten about the hond and shoulders until insensible, and the other had a supposed that the hond and shoulders until insensible, and the hond and shoulders until insensible, and the hond was else the was subjected

Who was the woman?
There are conjectures alloat around Alpine.
There are women whom Jennie Pavidson has insured. The girl herself was able to speak yesterda; for the first time. She refused to say a word at out the affair, but several times she called for a woman who lives in Alpine. She will recover.

Panished for Speaking His Mind.

Mr. Edmund Randolph, one of the younger members of the Stock Exchange, was suspended yesterday by the Governing Committee from the privileges of the floor for fifteen days on account of violation of the rules governing the conduct of members of the Exchange toward each other. The complainant was feerge V. Stern of Lowengard & Stern. Mr. Bandolph is an exceedingly quiet gentleman who attends strictly to business, but the provocation in the present case was too great for his fortegrance, and while his punishment may be technically just it has aroused a good deal of sympathy for him.

Mrs. Neho's heard her daughter's cry of alarm and itshed up stairs. She compelled the thief to be compelled the thief to be compelled the ball in his pockets, and then she threw him down stairs. Her husband scarched the man, cut found nothing more on his person. At the police office the man said his name was fied R. Trowbildge. He was locked in NEW ROOKS.

Brief Reviews of Important and Interesting New Publications. Zola's new novel, "The Downfall," translated by E. P. Robins (Cassell Company), is a pretty long book. Buyers will not complain that they do not get enough for their money. The compact print, running to nearly 600 pages, looks formidable, and is formidable in places. It is as little encouraging at the out-set as Tolstoi's "War and Peace" or Mrs. Ward's "History of David Grieve." The reader will wish, as the detail rises about him, that the impression could have been produced in a less lingering and wearving manner. He will detest the realistic method during a number of chapters. But the reward here, as in life sometimes, is to the persevering. The horrors of war begin to be depicted at the 181st page, and it is a lurid picture indeed that is unrolled thereafter. The Downfall," which is the story, of course, of the thrashing the French got from the Germans in 1870-71. Is divided into three parts. The first part sets forth the reasons why it was possible for the thrashing to be bestowed as it was. Summed up, the reasons were too few soldiers, incompetent leadership, poor discipline, an underestimate of the enemy, and ignorance of the new methods of war. But Zola presents the reasons in 180 pages of detall. He follows the course of the army of Chalons. He dwells upon the wavering purpose which marched that army up and down uselessly and ridiculously at the most vital of times. It advanced only to retreat. It was diverted by rumors and stampeded by shadows. It ran for life, throwing away knapsacks and muskets, when the enemy was twenty leagues away. According to the novelist it was perpetually making soup which it never ate, always running off in a panie shortly after the water had got to boil. It was footsore, famished, and demoralized. The story follows particularly the fortunes of a number of members of the 108th Regiment of Infantry. It tells of Corporal Jean, the pensant, and Private Maurice, the lawyer, who hated each other at first and became bosom friends afterward, and of several others, officers and men. of contrasted antecedents, qualifications, and characters. There is little verisimilitude in the way in which events are made to explain themselves through the talk of these men. They are constantly meeting in the most unlikely places and making the longest and most improbable speeches, and the translator adds to the air of untruth by mixing up French and American fashions of speech in a very remarkable manner. It is curious enough to hear these French soldiers exclaiming "Name of God?" and "God's thunder!" and uttering almost in the same breath such phrases as "Skip the ranch," "Dog-gone it," and "Oh, A good many useless reiterations mar this part of the story, but the reader will not deny the interest of some of the repeated points. The frequently recurring picture of the sick Emperor is begun here. We beheld him toted about, as the novelist says, like a piece of his own voluminous baggage. His long wagon train, heaped with choice food and wines and table service and silver stewpans. blocks the pursage of the army. Zola nevertires of flashing the silver stewpans upon us. Corporal Jean and Private Maurice are constantly catching the shimmer of them. They are of small use to the owner. Zola pic-tures him pacing up and down in a bourgeois parior at Chêne, sleepless, without appetite for the good things which his attendants are devouring, distressed by the incessant pangs of his ailment, made up like an actor. his ghastly paller hidden under a smear of rouge, urged on against his conscience by a pitiless voice from Paris, the voice of the Empress, crying "March! march! Die a hero's death on the piled corpses of your people; let the whole world gaze in awe-struck admiration, for the honor and glory of your name!" But it is in part second that the great interest begins. Here we have the full blaze and thunder of war. No shocking detail is withheld. One of the strongest passages is that describing the manner in which the Citizen Weiss defends his house at Bazeilles, near Sedan. This portly patriot, Maurice's brotherin-law, his spectacles slipping from his sweaty nose, fights like a hero or a demon, and is butchered at last. The flerce little Bavarians swarm in the street like black ants; there is no end to them. The house is shreded with their bullets, and finally compels the honor of having a cannon trained upon it. Dirty lonfers" Weiss calls the Bavarians in the translation, though we dare say not in the original. Dirty they may have been, but loafers they were not. They had the activity of a conflagration or a postilence. They carried Weiss out and stood him up against dead wall and shot him. His wife is brought out from Sedan to see him die, and the final agony unhappily is drawn out into clap-trap. All the battle of Sedan is described in the second part. Maurice's regiment lies under fire all day in a cabbage field. The Captain of his company, a handsome dandy, has come into the action fresh from a lady's dressing room, smelling of Persian lilac. A fragment of shell knocks him off his feet. The novelist describes the symptom of fear among other things—the dizziness and the vomiting—all that is ignoble and revolting. He describes the hospital work also. Pages are given to the details of war surgery. The blood that the surgeons shed is thrown out upon a parterr of daisies, and a morgue is established behind a row of lilac bushes. The "very pretty" operation of amputation at the shoulder joint after Lisfranc's method is performed by the chief surgeon in thirty-five seconds, the usual time being forty, and the patient lives five minutes after it is completed, to the doctor's great glory. The foot of the Captain who smells of Persian illac is taken off here in the presence of the frivolous pretty woman in whose dressing room the perfume was afforded. It is a beautiful white-skinned foot. The Captain dies in losing it, but there are more men left in the French army, and in the German army, too, and the frivolous pretty weman goes on flirting the same as before. "Oh, those guns, those guns." the Emperor cries as he continues to pace up and down in the bourgeois parlor; and then the capitulation is chronicled, and the movement of the Emperor with his stewpans across the Belgian border. Nor must wo omit to take notice that during all this raging battle of Sedan a peasant keeps at his ploughing in a sheltered valley within view of the storming armies. He hardly lifts his head from his work. "Why should he lose a day?" his interesting reflections run. "Men might fight, but none the less the corn on growing; and folks must live." Part III. affords the picture of the camp of 80,000 prisoners on the peninsula of Iges, near Sedan-a camp that knew starvation. flith, madness, murder, and contagion—and describes the siege of Paris, the career of the Commune, and the death of Maurice, who, fighting for the Commune, is bayoneted by Jean, a soldier on the other side. Corporal Jean does not know whom he has run through until after the deed is done; nevertheless the blood of his friend is upon his hands, and he cannot marry the woman he loves and who oves him, because she is Maurice's sister. M. Zola is positive that they cannot marry She says farewell and Jean says farewell, and they go their separate ways to "create a new France," and that is the end of the book. We may add that it seems a pity to usher out a powerful realistic tale with such a sentimental firecracker, but so it is, and we cannot see that there is any help for it. Two more volumes of Mr. Charles Godfrey Loland's careful and admirable translation of the works of Heinrich Heine John W. Lovell Company) contain the essays entitled "Germany," which were originally published in France in the Rerue des Deux Mondes, and which consider the intellectual effort of the Germans as manifested particularly in their religious, philosophical, and romantic literature. Heine's review of Christianity is here, and his always interesting, if largely unjusti-Sable, cortrait of August Withelm Schlegel.

including the fine kid gloves which that great man was accustomed to wear while lectur-ing at the University of Bonn and the odor of good society and can de mille fleurs which he shed around, and the lackey in livery who stood by to renew the glass of east sucre and snuff the wax tapers in silver can diesticks on the lecture desk. The translator's abundant notes, explanatory and critical, are interesting and valuable, and, so far as we have noted, his work in these two volumes is altogether praiseworthy.

Of novels newly published and republished we note "Faith," translated from the Spanish of Don Armando Palacio Valdes by Isabel F. THE BALLOT-BOX STUFFERS.

Lawyer Peshall Attacked in a Federal Cour by Prosecutor Winfield.

TRENTON, July 8.-Ex-Secretary of the Navy Robeson, representing Gen. E. Bird Grubb, and Prosecutor Winfield of Hudson county were in the Federal Court to-day asking for a process under which an investigation might be had of the proceedings taken by Lawyer Peshall of Jersey City to get the convicted ballot-box stuffers out of the State prison. Gen. Grubb ran for Governor the year that the boxes were tampered with, and he has always claimed since that he got more votes than Abbett. The ballot-box stuffers, not the voters he says, defeated him. He is desirous of keeping the stuffers under lock and key, at least until the Republican Convention determines whether he or somebody else shall run for Governor on the Republican ticket this year. If the nomination is given to him he will want the stuffers kept in prison until after the election. His counsel, Gen. Robeson, supported a motion made by Mr. Winfield for a rule to show cause why Peshall's appeal from the decision of Judge Green refusing the writs of habens corpus should not be vacated and stricken from the record.

Mr. Winfield said that the petition under which the decision was made was false and evidently intended to deceive the court. The affidavit accompanying the petition, he al-leged, was also a falsehood, and the applica-tion made by Peshali was, from beginning to end, based upon fraud. He thought it was due the Federal Court and the judicial authori-es of Hudson county that an investigation be to the Federal Court and the judicial authorities of Hudson county that an investigation be made.

Mr. Peshall did not oppose the granting of the rule, but he considered the time inopportune, and the application on the whole most extraordinary. The bailot box people, he said, had been removed to the State prison in violation of the order of the Federal court, and the Judge and Sheriof who "railroaded" them were in contempt of that court for delng so. Mr. I eshall moved as an amendment to Mr. Winfield's motion that Morchell. Hart, and Pation, the three stuffers who are his personal clients, be arraigned in court for separate disposition. He said that Judge Lippincott had announced from the bench that the Federal court writ should be ignored.

Gen. Robeson contended that there was no contempt, and none intended. After the decision of the Court of Errors, sustaining the verdict in this case, the defendants were in the position of prisoners on their way to State prison, and the act of the Sheriff was simply ministerial. Testimony, would be taken to prove that the prisoners were not in the custody of the Sheriff at the time of Peshall's application, and that the affidavit was faise. If this was so it was not only perjury, but an attempt to use the processes of the Federal Court for improper ends.

Mr. Peshall said he saw the affidavit in question signed, and he denied the accusation of perjury. He reliceated that all who had to do with sending his clients to State prison were in contempt of court. Judge Green said the only question was whether a fraud had been perpetrated and the court had been imposed upon. He thought the circumstances warranted an investigation, and he granted the motion for a rule to show cause, making it returnable next Wednesday. The taking of testimony will be-rule to show cause, making it returnable next Wednesday. The taking of testimony will be-gin in Jersey City to morrow. On Tuesday next the investigators will examine the ballot box stuffers at the State prison.

Essays upon some Controverted Questions.

By THOMAS H. HUXLEY, F. R. S., author of "Man's Place in Nature." "Lay Sermons." etc. 12mo. Cloth, $2.00.

Mew Publications.

In this volume Prof. Huxley has brought ogether a number of his more important recent essays, and has added certain new mat er. Among the topics discussed are Gladstone and Genesis," "The Evolution of Theology." "Science and Pseudo-Science." Agnosticism," and "The Rise and Progress of Palmontology."

Ethan Allen.

THE ROBIN HOOD OF VERMONT. By

HENRY HALL 12mo. Cloth, $1.00. The aim of the author has been to depict Allen's personality, and to throw some new light upon the character of one who has been often violently assailed. Allen's own letters have been freely drawn upon. The mass of material which has been examined has included matter not utilized before, and the result is an impartial and careful picture of Alien's assointions, and habits of thought and action. which, it is believed, can not be neglected by Americans interested in the history of their own country.

The Hope of the Gospel.

BY GEORGE MACDONALD, author of "Unspoken Sermons," "Robert Falconer," etc.

12mo. Cloth, $1.00. In this volume Dr. MacDonald, writing in a simple, graphic, interesting way, deals with rarious modern phases of religious belief. He discusses sin and its penalty, the reward of obedience, and the relations of men to their Creator and to each other. At a time when there is so much inquiry and unrest among thinking people, the frank discussions and strong arguments of this book will be especially pertinent and helpful.
